Before our eyes are spread— The dublic's many-hued coukade, Tou marigold's bright head. The rain drops patter on the lake, The swallows cease to fly,
And, on the roof, a meeting hold-For nipping frosts are nigh.

The latest blooms the garden holds

By hundreds they are gathered there, To plan an early flight; Says one: Ah me! In Athers now, How fair the rampart height! Unto the Parthenan's great frieze, Each waning year, at Fall, I go: my thatch fills up the dent Made by a cannon ball.

Across the light smoke of chibouks
I pass quite unalarmed: I glance by turban and tarboock, And come and leave unharmed.

A third :- A triglyph shapes my home, When brooding on the temple's height, I watch the pageant west.

A fourth one :- I am always frund At Rhodes-the Templars Hall: Each winter there my test I pitch, Atop a pillar tall. Another: - I shall make a stop
